Book details challenges of son with bipolar disorder

Middletown mom writes to try to help others facing similar circumstances

By Phyllis Zimmerman
Special to the Press & Journal

SPECIAL TO THE PRESS & JOURNAL BY PHYLLIS ZIMMERMAN

"I never, ever thought I would write a book. I'm a mother, not an author."

Linda Osifat

When Linda Osifat of Middletown learned that her young son was diagnosed with bipolar disorder, she didn't cry or rage. Instead, she felt relief. "It was such a relief to get a diagnosis. Finally, something made sense," the mother of three recalled. This explained why 6-1/2-year-old Landin constantly threw "out-of-control" tantrums lasting three or more hours, several times a day. Some days he even roused from sleep feeling angry for no apparent reason.

It was the same relief Osifat felt two years previously when hearing of Landin's diagnosis of the pervasive development disorder NOS, which falls under the autism spectrum. NOS stands for Not Otherwise Specified.

Those are accompanied by Landin's other diagnoses of ADHD (attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder), OCD (obsessive-compulsive disorder), and ODD (oppositional defiant disorder). All in all, it was a lot of psychiatric acronyms to place upon a child before his 10th birthday.

With this in mind, Osifat wrote and published a book about her son that's titled "Just a Label—Until Landin." It took her five years to complete.

"I never, ever thought I would write a book. I'm a mother, not an author. Most books you see about things like this, though, are written by doctors and not from a mother's perspective, so a friend urged me to write this book," said Osifat, who works as an office supervisor for a Harrisburg law firm.

The 149-page volume, published by

Amazon, documents the first nine years of Landin's life based upon Osifat's journal entries. "Eventually, my journal became 'I could help others with this,'" Osifat recalled.

Apparently, the book has resonated with readers. One Amazon reviewer wrote, "Linda writes from her heart about the journey she and her family have taken to help her son. She has allowed the reader a raw view inside her world. I commend her for her transparency. Their struggle is the struggle of many families trying to help a child. I believe this book will help other mothers and families to realize they are not alone."

Throughout the book, Osifat describes the difficulties Landin endured

POLICE: Borough officers usually go to all EMT calls

Laudenslager got the consent of the man's daughter to remove from the trailer and give to her for safekeeping five pistols and two long guns that the man had in his residence.

On April 28, 2016, borough police charged the man with five counts of recklessly endangering another person. He was admitted into Dauphin County's ARD (Accelerated Rehabilitative Disposition) program, and to attend anger management classes.

Laudenslager says he still doesn't know for certain why he showed up at the EMS call for the man.

"You wouldn't suspect when everybody is there to help an individual" that a situation would become dangerous, but that's what happened, he said.

When contacted by the Press & Journal, the man did not express gratitude to Laudenslager for saving his life. Instead, he said that the police should not have been in his mobile home in the first place, and he blamed them for in his view unnecessarily escalating the situation.

He also said he does not believe that the police were justified in taking his guns away.

However, it is "standard practice" for borough police to be at any EMT call anywhere in Middletown, if an officer is available, regardless of whether police have been dispatched to the scene or not, interim Chief Mouchette told the Press & Journal.

This is to "safeguard" the resident, for example to make sure that the door is locked and the person's property secured if they have to go to the hospital and no one else is home. Police are also there to insure that the person's belongings are protected, Mouchette said.

Laudenslager has been in situations involving a gun before during his now 17 years as a cop — all with Middletown. But this was the only time he can remember ever wrestling a gun out of someone's hands.

"To me he's a hero," Mouchette said of Laudenslager's actions that day. "A lot of officers would have panicked, maybe pulled out their weapon and shot this person. For him to try and risk his own life to find and save the person's life and not harm him, is a very big deal."

"These are split-second decisions. The officer didn't have time to think 'what should I do,'" Mouchette continued. "He just reacted. It's easy to Monday morning quarterback when things go bad, but when he does the right thing people should also say 'good job.'"

Originally from South Williamsport, Laudenslager was bitten by the law enforcement bug while volunteering to serve as a deputy game warden with the Pennsylvania Game Commission for about five years.

He started taking the civil service test toward becoming a municipal police officer somewhere in Pennsylvania, when some family members in this area connected Laudenslager with an opportunity in Middletown. The borough hired him and paid for him to get Act 120 municipal police officer certification.

Besides being a patrolman, Laudenslager also volunteers on his own time to be a "peer officer" with the Middletown department, Mouchette said. Peer officers are available to talk to other police officers who need to talk to another cop on an anonymous basis regarding stress and personal problems. It could be marital issues, money, self-medicating with alcohol and or drugs, depression, or another mental health issue that could lead to thoughts of suicide.

Peer officers can talk to other officers within their own department. They are also available to talk to police officers in other departments, outside of Middletown, who for one reason or another are not comfortable talking with someone within their own force.

Courts have upheld that nothing discussed between a peer officer and an officer requesting help ever has to be revealed, Laudenslager noted. If the problem requires more than just a conversation, the peer officer can assist with that as well.

"We don't give the help ourselves — we are not therapists by any means — but we direct them to make sure they get the help they need," Laudenslager said.

At one time more than 40 New York City police officers were killing themselves each year; now that's down to about five or six, Mouchette said. He gives most of the credit to a peer officer program similar to the one Laudenslager is involved in here.

"When cops are emotionally stable and able to get things off their chest, they are much better. A stressed out cop is going to go out and stress out the community," the chief said.

Asked what he does to relieve stress outside of work, Laudenslager said he enjoys spending time with his family. He lives with his wife and two children in West Hanover Township.
